- 25X1X 1. Public relations men and newspapermen in working contact with Russian and satellite missions in Paris seem convinced that a satellite attack against Yugoslavia using Hungarian, Rumanian, and Bulgarian troops will start no later than April 1951, weather conditions permitting. The Russians and satellites are confident that England and France would protest armed intervention of the United States, especially the use of atomic weapons.
2. The same persons forecast the downfall of Yugoslavia would mean:
- The end of Titoism among satellites.
 - The renewal of guerrilla attacks against Greece.
 - The way paved for later attack on Iran which would probably be unresisted.

This document is hereby regraded to CONFIDENTIAL in accordance with the letter of 16 October 1978 from the Director of Central Intelligence to the Archivist of the United States.
